The book is organised into twelve chapters: Introduction to Financial Management: Company. The present invention relates to a rock boring tool in which the tool is configured to receive, with high pressure, a core sample of rock material for further processing. An important aspect of a manufacturing operation is to provide the proper tools necessary to produce quality product at a competitive price. In the drilling of rock, it is necessary to remove a core sample of the rock material. Typically, a core sample is removed by drilling a hole which is 10 to 20 inches in diameter. The majority of the bore hole is then drilled to another depth to obtain the maximum amount of core, which core can then be further processed, i.e., aggregate, crushed rock, etc. Thus, considerable time and expense is involved in providing a suitable core drill. One such core drill is shown in U.S. Pat. No. 4,332,228. It utilizes a plastic core box which is weighted at the bottom to provide a weighted core drilling unit. A gear arrangement attached to the drill stem mechanism axially drives the drill by rotation of the drill stem, while axial thrust is applied to the drill by the weighted core box. A chain and pinion arrangement is also provided to rotate the drill. However, the present invention relates to a rock drilling tool in which a core sample is removed by a drill mechanism which axially displaces the drill to boring positions and then rotates the drill mechanism for drilling. The rock formation which is drilled is forced to exit through the tool, thus improving the quality of the core removed and increasing the rate of hole completion. As I was working on this you, I was thinking about how Shakespeare was the one who personified the universal human tragedy and gave it its quintessence. It was his genius to find the scope in the trap of our amour propre. Today we think that he expressed the human predicament, but Shakespeare wrote it on the stage of the human enterprise. He wrote it in three parts: in the first he showed the trap of amour propre, in the second he showed the trap of 'man's inhumanity to man', and in the third he showed the trap of good and evil.
